JAVA NOTES - NOTES AND INTERVIEW QUESTIONS, ANSWERS

Fig. Life Cycle of Thread

Main Thread

Every time a Java program starts up, one thread begins running which is called as the main thread of the program because it is the one that is executed when your program begins.

- Child threads are produced from main thread.
- When it is the last thread to finish execution as it performs various other done operations.

Creating a Thread

Java defines two ways in which this can be accomplished.

- You can implement the Runnable interface.
- You can extend the Thread class, itself.

Create Thread by implementing Runnable

The easiest way to create a thread is to create a class that implements the Runnable interface. To implement Runnable, a class need only implement a single method called run() which is declared like this

public void run ()
